 Armand Gert Solomon Bam Thesis Title: Embodying virtue in employment: Exploring the employment experiences of people with disabilities

Armand Bam holds a Postgraduate Diploma in Management Practice and an MPhil in Disability Studies from UCT. He works in the disability sector, heading an independent development organisation.

Armand Bam's thesis focuses on the employment experiences of people with disabilities in South Africa. Given declining rates of employment, the thesis aims to draw further attention to the barriers to and facilitators of employment for people with disabilities. He examines the challenges that organisations dealing with employment for disabled people encounter, and legislative advances, as background to the research. The conceptual framework adopted addresses common conceptions of disability, and disability as an aspect of diversity, and introduces virtue theory as a framework for understanding the experiences of disabled people. The cases explored cover a wide range of impairments, and deal with three overarching themes:
 factors influencing employment, early experiences of inclusion in the workplace, and accommodations in the workplace.
 His study develops a conceptual model to improve the analysis of the employment experiences of people with disabilities.

Andrea Joy Ferry

Thesis Title: Understanding the antecedents of employee sustainability behaviours: measuring and theorising self- and collective efficacy for sustainability

Andrea Ferry is a Chartered Accountant, and holds a PGDA from UCT and an honours in Sustainable Development from the University of Stellenbosch, South Africa. She joined the Graduate School of Business at UCT in 2014 for her master's and doctoral studies.

Andrea Ferry's thesis aims to help organisations and researchers assess the degree to which individual employees are likely to adopt sustainability integration behaviours, as indicated by their levels of self- and collective efficacy for sustainability (SES, CES). She develops the constructs of SES and CES, and establishes, validates, and refines corresponding measurement scales. By analysing data collected in trialling the scales and in interviews, she develops models of antecedents of SES and CES. She develops these constructs, scales, and models as tools to support organisations that wish to design sustainability interventions and measure their impacts.

Jess Schulschenk

Thesis Title: Effecting strategic change: the work of strategic champions in shaping narrative infrastructure

Jess Schulschenk holds a BSc in Environmental Sciences from UCT and an MPhil in Sustainable Development from Stellenbosch University. She joined the Graduate School of Business at UCT in 2014 for her PhD studies. Previously, she worked in the corporate sector researching governance and sustainability.

Jess Schulschenk's thesis studies how corporates shift their decision-making principles to include the logic of socio-ecological dependency, and the work of strategic champions in supporting organisation to achieve this.

She undertakes a grounded, comparative case study of strategic champions within South African companies, drawing primarily on participant interviews. Her analysis reveals that strategic champions undertake different forms of work to support leaders in shifting the narrative infrastructure of the organisation. She contributes to research on strategy as narrative practice, offering a framework for understanding how organisational narratives arise, interact, and can be shaped. Her findings shed light on how organisational actors, other than leaders, can effect strategic change.

*Gabriel Waweru

Thesis Title: An assessment of the financial sustainability of savings and credit cooperative societies in Kenya

Gabriel Waweru has a BSc in applied accounting from Oxford Brookes University (UK) and an MBA Finance from Egerton University. He is also a Certified Public Accountant (CPA). His doctoral work emanated from his vast experience in teaching Accounting and Finance courses at Meru University of Science and Technology Kenya, for many years.

Gabriel Waweru's thesis aims at assessing the financial sustainability of SACCOs and identifying the challenges faced by these financial institutions. SACCOs in Kenya are playing a pivotal role in ensuring that the Kenya's vision 2030 is achieved. They also play a major role in enhancing financial deepening thus reducing financial exclusion of the Kenyan masses. Financial sustainability of these institutions is therefore of paramount importance. The thesis has utilised a multilevel technique of analysis and has developed a model which can be applied in different sectors. The findings of the study will go a long way in SACCO policy development. The thesis also opens a window for further research by both academicians and policy makers in Kenya and worldwide.

In Demography:

Nadine Natasha Nannan

Thesis Title: Measuring child mortality in resource limited settings using alternative approaches: South African case study

Nadine Nannan trained in molecular biology and, after working for a few years, completed a course in Medical Demography at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine in 1996. Since then she has worked extensively in population health research, with a focus on child health.

Nadine Nannan's thesis develops an analytical framework which maps out different data sources and methods of analysis of child mortality data, including methods to allow for the impact of HIV and AIDS. She applies appropriate demographic techniques to evaluate the quality of the different data sources. Her work has quantified remarkable improvements in the completeness of the registration of births and deaths in South Africa, particularly since 2000, and illustrates the possibility of using civil registration data to monitor provincial mortality rates. The statistical challenges arising from the movement of children are identified in her thesis. She concludes that South Africa is poised to utilise civil registration and vital statistics to monitor child mortality, and that the comprehensive evaluation of available data is useful for similar research in other countries.

In Economics:

Peter Wankuru Chacha

Thesis Title: Firm level export dynamics and market access costs: evidence from Kenya

Peter Chacha holds BA and MA degrees in Economics from the University of Nairobi, Kenya. He joined the School of Economics at UCT in 2013 for his PhD studies. Before this, he worked as an Economist at the National Treasury in Kenya.

Peter Chacha's thesis examines firm level export behaviour in Kenya and contributions to Kenya's export growth over time. The analysis draws on a unique panel of transaction data for the period 2004-2013, and shows that export growth is dominated by established exporters, with the role of new entrants being small and characterised by regular exit from foreign markets. He finds fewer exits among firms with high prior export values and wider product and destination scope, which reflect these firms' ability to overcome market access costs. He shows that fragility-related shocks to access to African market reduce Kenya's total exports to the region through a reduction in the number of exporters. Larger firms are less adversely affected by this shock than smaller firms, leading to the conclusion that increasing firm size is key to stimulating export growth in Kenya.

Godfrey Mahofa

Thesis Title: The spatial dimensions of economic activity in South Africa: the role of regional policy, crime and the business environment

Godfrey Mahofa holds a BSc(Hons) in Economics and MSc in Agricultural and Applied Economics from the University of Zimbabwe. He joined the School of Economics at UCT in 2012 for his PhD studies. Before joining UCT, he worked as a Lecturer at the University of Zimbabwe.

Godfrey Mahofa's thesis examines the influence of regional development policies and the quality of institutions on the distribution of economic activity in South Africa. He uses historical business registration data from the 1800s and 2011 census data to create measures of firm entry and migration flows into South African municipalities. He combines this dataset with information on the location of Regional Industrial Development zones from 1982, and crime data from the South African Police Service. His analysis of the data shows that regional development policies increase firm entry when policy incentives are present, but decrease entry after the removal of the incentives. He further shows that firm entry and labour in-migration are low in municipalities with high crime rates. His thesis thus highlights the importance of institutions and regional development policy as drivers of business dynamism.

Naomi Muthoni Mathenge

Thesis Title: Financial structure, economic growth and firm productivity in Sub Saharan Africa

Naomi Mathenge holds a BA in Economics from Moi University, Kenya, and an MA degree in Economics from the University of Malawi. She joined the School of Economics at UCT in 2013 for her PhD studies after working at the Kenya Institute for Public Policy Research and Analysis.

Naomi Mathenge's thesis focuses on the influence of financial structure on economic growth and firm productivity in Sub Saharan Africa. She investigates the role of financial structure in the region and in Kenya, and finds that financial structure is not significant in explaining growth in the long-run. This she attributes to inefficient and underdeveloped banks and stock markets in the region. She further investigates the role of financial structure at the firm level by analysing the effect of financing options on firm productivity. She finds that firms that rely heavily on bank debt are more productive than firms that rely on other sources of finance. This she attributes to the dominance of banks in the region and banks' monitoring activities to ensure firms remain profitable and guarantee repayment of debt.

Brian Albert Monroe

Thesis Title: Stochastic models in experimental economics

Brian Monroe received his BSc in Economics and Finance from the University of Central Florida in 2010, and his MA in Economics from Georgia State University in 2012. He began his PhD at UCT in the same year.

Brian Monroe's thesis focuses on how economists model apparent violations of expected utility theory by individual decision makers, by incorporating randomness into the choice processes of agents. He considers the normative and statistical repercussions of this modeling strategy, questioning the capacity of several models of stochastic choice to make normatively useful statements about the welfare of agents. He discusses how incorporating randomness into the choice process can complicate relationships between the likelihood of choices and the measured welfare of the chooser. Finally, he questions the extent to which a practically tractable type of economic experiment accurately discriminates between different utility structures that characterise heterogeneous economic decision makers. He identifies limitations in this regard that negatively impact the accuracy of the measurement of the economic welfare of individuals. The thesis contributes to the rigorous calculation of statistical power requirements in experimental investigations of economic choice under risk.

Adeola Joseph Oyenubi

Thesis Title: Quantifying balance for casual inference: An information theoretic perspective

Adeola Oyenubi has a BSc in Statistics from the University of Ilorin in Nigeria and an MPhil in Mathematical Finance from UCT.

Adeola Oyenubi's thesis deals with the problem in the evaluation of social policies of being sure of comparing like with like. That is, how to be sure that the contrast between recipients and non-recipients of a social programme is a good measure of the causal impact of the programme. Adeola Oyenubi develops a new measure which quantifies how far apart two groups are on their observable characteristics and shows that this measure reliably picks up differences between groups which may confound causal estimates based on comparisons between them. He shows that his measure performs better than the techniques currently used for assessing these differences. He applies the techniques to the case of the National Supported Work Demonstration Programme in the USA and the child grant in South Africa, and shows that considerable caution must be exercised in drawing policy conclusions from the existing data.

Thesis Title: Access to financial services: towards an understanding of the role and impact of financial exclusion in Sub-Saharan Africa

Godfrey Ndlovu has a BComm in Management and an MSc in Finance & Investment from the National University of Technology in Zimbabwe, where he has been a lecturer in Finance for the past seven years.

Godfrey Ndlovu's thesis examines the role and impact of financial inclusion in Sub-Saharan Africa (SSA), a region characterised by the triad challenge of underdeveloped financial systems, limited access to financial services, and a poor socio-economic environment. He uses household survey and panel time-series data to investigate the impact of financial inclusion on poverty and bank stability. The results indicate that increased availability and usage of financial services disproportionately benefits the middle-class more than the very-poor and rich. Finally, the results indicate that financial inclusion has a positive impact on bank stability in SSA. However, high market power within banking systems and poor institutional frameworks tend to undermine the impact of financial inclusion on stability. This study advances our understanding of the economic implications of financial inclusion and the results provide guidance on economic policy and practice in this regard within the SSA region.

Hlalani Getrude Gumpo

Thesis Title: A theory-driven evaluation of an early childhood school readiness programme in an under-served area in the Western Cape Province

Hlalani Gumpo completed her BSocSc(Hons) in Organisational Psychology and MSocSc in Programme Evaluation at UCT. She worked as a Teaching Assistant in Organisational Psychology, School of Management Studies, UCT, before joining TechnoServe South Africa as a Monitoring and Evaluation Manager in 2015.

Hlalani Gumpo's thesis focuses on home visiting programmes and their viability to alleviate service access issues and produce meaningful outcomes for marginalised children. She utilises a combination of descriptive research and a pre-post non-equivalent group quasi-experimental design to assess a home visiting programme in the Western Cape, South Africa. Results of her study reveal very low implementation adherence for the home visiting programme, which was associated with poor outcomes. This evaluation's comprehensive approach to assessing child development in underserved areas provided a novel overview of the interaction of multiple factors in school readiness in impoverished communities. Home visiting programmes are implemented across the country as an alternative to traditional early childhood development services. However, their benefits are still in question. Improvements to their implementation, monitoring and evaluation systems are proposed as measures to improve the quality of home visiting programmes for the benefit of child development.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

Founded as the South African College (a boys' school that aimed to provide higher education as well) in 1829, the University was established as the University of Cape Town in 1918.

The early history was one of great expectations and hard times and it was not until the early years of the twentieth century that the University was developed into a fully-fledged tertiary institution. A significant and pioneering development in the 19th century was the admission of women as degree students in 1886, many years ahead of most universities in the world.

At the start of the 20th century the University incorporated the Diocesan College, the teacher training classes of the Normal College, the South African College of Music and the Cape Town Schools of Fine Art and Architecture.

The Medical School was established and in the 1920s the University began a partnership with the local health authority (now the Provincial Government's health department) that saw the Medical School move from the Hiddingh Campus and the Green Point Somerset Hospital to Observatory (the rest of UCT's Upper Campus moved from Hiddingh to its present site, on part of Cecil Rhodes' estate, in 1928). This partnership allowed for the construction of the first Groote Schuur Hospital on a University site. The partnership continues to this day and now involves not only Groote Schuur as a teaching hospital but Red Cross Children's Hospital, Valkenberg and a growing number of primary health care sites.

The period between the end of World War II and 1994 was marked by two themes. Firstly, the University recognised that if it was to be fully South African, it would have to move beyond academic non-segregation to be fully inclusive. It would have to face the consequential and increasing clashes with a government determined to legislate for segregation and enforce the doctrine of apartheid. And secondly, the University intended to transform into a leading research institution.

Before World War II, the University was largely a teaching university and its students were mostly undergraduates. The research undertaken was sporadic, though in some cases notable. A research committee was appointed for the first time in 1945. The next 75 years saw a great expansion of research and scholarly work such that the UCT of 2014 has a greater proportion of highly rated researchers and gains significantly more research grants and awards than any other South African University.

The 1980s and 1990s were characterized by the deliberate and planned transformation of the student body. This was aided by the establishment of the Academic Development Programme aimed at helping students from disadvantaged educational and social backgrounds to succeed and the desegregation of student residences. As a result, a student body that was 90% white in 1979, when UCT marked its 150th anniversary, is in 2014 more than 50% black. The total student enrolment of just above 26 000, includes international students drawn from over 100 countries, a significant proportion of which are from SADC states. Particular emphasis is placed on postgraduate studies and more than 20% of these students will be enrolled in master's and doctoral programmes. A growing number of postdoctoral fellows contribute substantially to the research endeavours and reputation of the University (UCT has more than a third of the total number of post docs in South Africa).

UCT continues to work towards its goal to be Africa's leading research university. Its success can be measured by the scope of study it offers and the calibre of its graduates.
